

Cave Creek Museum

Description:

In 1968, a small group of volunteers formed an historical society that found definition as the Cave Creek Museum. Cave creek's first church building was given to the organization to house the museum. The small structure was moved to the corner of Basin and Skyline Drive and set of land donated by Frank and Hazel Wright. Donations and gifts of historical significance poured in.

The Museum's presence in the community expanded in February 1987 when its current building was completed. An extensive collection of prehistoric and historic artifacts describe the lives of Indians, miners, ranchers and pioneers. The Museum Shop offers visitors gifts, Indian arts, and an extensive selection of books on the Southwest. In 1988, the old museum building was beautifully restored to its 1950's charm when it was the first Episcopal Church in Cave Creek.
